WATER. Water is often linked to the production of natural gas from coal.

Water is an invaluable asset of the community, one that we are committed to managing to the highest standards. This means if we produce water, it will be regularly tested for quality. Based on scientific results, government guidelines and safe production practices, we will manage any disposal in the best interests of a healthy environment.

To help you understand more about this issue, in future editions of this paper we will give you more information about water produced from natural gas from coal.

In the mean time, you may find more water information by going to www.csug.ca.
